We gave Wrex Bravecto at the beginning of August. He showed no symptoms or illness. On August 31st we left him to board for a week with our vet. We decided to get him neutered while we were gone as we figured it'd be easier for him to rest.

He was neutered that day, we checked back that evening and everything was fine. He began vomiting on Saturday, collapsed Sunday night, and was dead by Tuesday morning. We were out of the country and unfortunately my instructions to get in touch with us were not followed and I wasn't notified there was something wrong until Monday evening. I cut my trip short and flew out as soon as I could, he died while I was over the Atlantic.

The necropsy results show that his liver was failing, which lead to an ulcer in his intestines. The neutering exasperated the problem, which lead to 3 liters of uncoagulated blood in his abdomen, that eventually lead to a massive heart attack and his death. He showed no symptoms until it was too late and I trust our vet enough that I know they tried everything, they were doing everything they could and were with him when he died at 3am on that Tuesday. It's not standard to run blood tests prior to a routine surgery like that and as he didn't show anything wrong, there was no need to. If your dog has taken this I'd highly suggest you get some blood tests run ASAP for your own safety.

Wrex turned 2 on August 27th and prior to the trip I'd never been away from him for more than a few hours since he was 6 weeks old. I never got to say a real goodbye to him.

It's been about a month and I still catch myself staring at his pictures, still checking my rear view mirror for his giant head, and still expecting to hear his big floppy feet coming around the corner. I miss him every day and will never forget my fuzzy moose.
