Pauli

Sabine Kemmer - October 10, 2016

Our cat Pauli

We have carefully chosen this "backyard cat" and we immediately took him to the vet. There he was examined for the first time, he was covered with fleas, but no other findings.

He was dewormed and treated with a flea powder. Then we went home with him and everything was fine. According to the vet we had to use the "Bravecto Spot on" after three days for other fleas that still might slip away. Everything went fine.

We read in the manual of the "Bravecto Spot on", and then treated the cat with the "Spot on" accordingly. After one day, the little cat began to meow more, which we declared as "call to his former playmates." He became calmer.

The next day he vomited and we found that he was very quiet, just lying there in his basket, and did not eat. We thought this was all the excitement, and the switch to our house, so the cat was probably impressed, we cuddled extensively with him which he enjoyed very much.

We thought: "Everything is all right again." At night he vomited a few times, the next morning we went to the vet because of an emergency situation and when we got there, he was dead.

We do not know what happened, but from the date he received "Bravecto Spot on," he deteriorated.

We had the cat for just one week. We reported this to the company of Bravecto who offered to have the cat examined at their expense.

Since there is no veterinarian here that could carry out this investigation, it was said that we should send him at our costs to the lab, but we would not get him back.

Since we wanted to bury Pauli respectful, we decided to refrain from further investigation.
